

If you're considering purchasing a jet card, be sure to weigh the pros and cons carefully. While jet cards can offer some benefits, they also come with some significant drawbacks. Some of the top reasons to avoid jet cards include:

You're locked into one supplier

When you purchase a jet card, you're typically locked into using one particular supplier. This can be problematic if that supplier has reliability issues or goes out of business. With fractional ownership, standard charters, and jet membership programs, you have the flexibility to choose from a variety of suppliers.

Limited availability

Life can be unpredictable, especially when it comes to travel. Last-minute travel plans could mean you need to book a last-minute private flight, or you may need to change an existing itinerary for an upcoming private flight with little notice. Whether it's simply a change in travel plans, the desire to book a spontaneous getaway, or a sudden emergency that has come up that requires you to book a flight quickly, we understand that our private flight clients greatly appreciate flexibility and last-minute availability. Jet cards often have limited availability, which can be frustrating if you need to fly on short notice. With our Jet Membership, you usually have more options when it comes to chartering private flights.

High minimums

Jet cards often have high minimums, which can be difficult to reach if you don't fly private often. Otherwise, you typically only pay for the hours you use the aircraft. The requirement of purchasing a minimum amount of hours upfront can be especially problematic if you don't have a chance to use them before they expire. Alas, a lot of jet card holders find themselves in this frustrating situation.

Lack of choices

One of the biggest drawbacks to jet cards is the lack of flexibility they offer when it comes to when jet card holders can fly and what type of aircraft they can charter. Unlike our Jet Membership program, jet card holders are often locked into specific aircraft types and flight times, which can be very limiting. Whether you want the freedom to charter a last-minute private flight, or the ability to switch up the different types of aircraft you fly privately on, our Jet Membership program provides those options.

High price points

Another major downside to jet cards is that they typically come with high price points. This is due to the fact that jet card providers often charge hefty initiation and annual fees, as well as mark ups on the actual cost of flying. Our flat membership fee is completely transparent, and as members, our clients receive access to wholesale no-commission rates on all private flights that they charter.

Lack of perks

When compared to other types of private aviation programs, jet cards often lack in the perks department. This is because most jet card providers do not offer things like loyalty rewards or upgrades, which can be a major disappointment for frequent flyers.

They can have restrictions

Another thing to keep in mind is that jet cards can often come with a number of restrictions. For example, some cards might only allow you to fly to certain destinations or only allow you to fly on certain days of the week.

They can be complicated

It's important to keep in mind that jet cards can be quite complicated. There are often a lot of different terms and conditions that go along with them, which can make it difficult to understand exactly what you're getting into.

Hidden fees

Many jet card programs come with hidden fees, such as fuel surcharges, which can add up quickly. Be sure to read the fine print carefully so you know exactly what you're paying for.

Strict cancelation policies

Most jet card programs have strict cancelation policies, which means you may not be able to get a refund if you need to cancel your flight.

Poor customer service

Finally, one of the biggest complaints about jet cards is the poor customer service that is often associated with them. This is due to the fact that jet card providers are often more focused on selling their product than providing a good customer experience.
