

You may think that flying private is only for the rich and famous, but that's not necessarily true. There are ways to make flying private more affordable than you might think. Here are a few:

Fly during off-peak times

One way to make flying private more affordable is to fly during off-peak times. Flying during less popular times can often lead to lower prices because there is less demand for private jet charter during those times. If you're flexible with your travel schedule, you can often save money by flying during off-peak hours.

Charter a one-way trip

Oftentimes, private flights will cost less for one-way trips. One-way trips are often cheaper because the aircraft doesn't have to return to its home base after dropping you off at your destination. This means that the charter company can often fly the aircraft empty on the return trip, which saves them money. In turn, they pass those savings on to you in the form of lower rates. If you're looking to fly private for an upcoming trip but trying to decide on a cost-saving compromise, chartering just one leg of your flight rather than chartering a round-trip flight can be a good solution.

Choose a smaller aircraft

If you don't need the space or the amenities of a larger aircraft, you can save money by choosing a smaller aircraft. Smaller aircraft are typically cheaper to charter than larger ones, so you can save money by downgrading your aircraft size.

Split the cost with a large group

Traveling with a large group of friends or family is always more fun, but when it comes to flying private, this can also significantly bring down the cost of your flight. If you're paying for a large family to fly commercially anyway, for example, the cost can add up quickly, especially if you're flying in first class. Many people are surprised to discover there are finally feasible private aviation options for large groups compared to individually priced commercial airline tickets.

Fly on an empty leg flight

An empty leg flight is a private jet flight that has no passengers booked on it. The term "empty leg" refers to the fact that the plane will be flying without any paying customers onboard. Empty leg flights can often be found for significantly less than the price of a regular private jet charter. This is because private jet operators are often willing to sell empty legs at a discount in order to fill up their planes and avoid flying them back to their home base with no passengers. If you're flexible with your travel dates and destination, booking an empty leg flight can be a great way to save money on your next private jet charter.

Enroll in our exclusive JetMembership program

Our exclusive Jet Membership is a great way to make flying private more affordable. By paying wholesale rates, you can save money on your flights and avoid the higher costs of the traditional private aviation pricing model. With a Jet Membership, you can also enjoy the convenience of flying from your home airport and avoiding the hassles of commercial airports.

Although there is an upfront membership cost to factor in, our clients quickly find that this cost is minuscule compared to the cost savings of chartering flights at wholesale rates. You'll want to look at the whole picture and consider the benefits of the membership, such as access to exclusive deals and discounts, when you are comparing prices and options.

If you are considering a Jet Membership, there are a few things you should keep in mind. First, you will need to find a reputable company, like JetMembership.com, that offers memberships. There are many companies that advertise cost-savings programs, such as Jet Cards, but not all of them are created equal. Make sure you do your research and find a company that has a good reputation and is able to offer you the services you need. You will also need to consider the customer service of the company you choose. You should always read reviews of the company before you make a final decision. This way, you can be sure that you are getting the best possible service. At JetMembership.com, we are knowledgeable and experienced operators in the private aviation industry, and we pride ourselves on excellent customer service.
